This performance commemorates the approximately 800 women whose deaths during the Great War are recorded by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. Women were largely involved in non-combatative roles, but nevertheless, they faced enormous risks. By way of example, many served with the Queen Alexandra's Imperial Military Nursing Service, and whilst hostile forces ought not, under the Geneva Conventions, target those who are treating the sick and injured, several hospital ships were destroyed and sunk.

One of those, the Hospital ship "Glenart Castle", was torpedoed and sunk in the Bristol Channel on 26 February 1918, when seven RAMC officers and 47 medical orderlies along with 99 of the hospital patients on board lost their lives. Eight nurses of the QAIM Nursing Service were also lost:

Katy Beaufoy, Acting Matron,
Rebecca Rose Beresford, Staff Nurse, aged 39,
Edith Blake, Staff Nurse, aged 32,
Elizabeth Edgar, Staff Nurse
Jane Evans, Sister,
Charlotte Henry, Staff Nurse,
Rose Elizabeth Kendall, Sister, aged 31, and
Mary MacKinnon, Staff Nurse, aged 31, (Territorial Force Nursing Service)

Their names are listed on the Hollybrook Memorial in Southampton, which was unveiled by the War Graves Commission in 1930, to commemorate those members of the Commonwealth forces who were lost or buried at sea and whose final resting place is unknown.
